Any time you can find another way to say the same thing, you've identified some sort of formal property—a description of how it is written. Simply put, choice equals style. And style is a formal property of literature. Please note, however, that the distinction between what and how is just a useful tool, not a hard-and-fast reality.

Formal Properties of Literature

The assessment design is guided by a content blueprint, a document that clearly articulates the content that will be included in the assessment and the cognitive rigor of that content. The content standards the test is designed to assess determine what content makes it into the test's item pool.
